

Lulu Wilson was born into a family of artists. Being exposed to her mother's painting and father's violin playing from a young age, she naturally developed a keen artistic instinct. Her concentration on the visual mediums was apparent early on. She learned technique from dutiful drawing both from life and the model and from various classes on drawing.

Her love of people and portraiture is central to her sensibility as an artist. Her studies in literature are also evidenced in her work; there is an intellectual element that balances the physicality of the paint medium as well as an awareness of classic themes and archetypes. Lulu has worked in many capacities as an artist while she has honed her eye and her hand to the rigors of representational painting as well the poetry of all painting. She is currently working on portrait commissions as well as exhibiting her work in various public venues. LuLu's paintings are in numerous private collections. She resides in Vermont with her husband and two children.
